"Angina oceurs in both sexes."-Dr. John Forbet: p. 88.
angina pectoris, s. [Lat = angioa of the breast.] Tha naise first given by Dr. Heberdeo io 1768, and since then univer sally adopted as the desiguation of a very painful digease, called by him also a disorder of the breast; by aome others "spasm of the chest," or " heart-stroke," and popularly "breast-pang." It is characterised by intense pain in the pracordial region, attended by a feeliog of auffocation and a fearful sense of impending death. These symptoms may conimpenang few minutes, half an honr, or even tinus for a few minutes, hang the paroxysin the an hour or more. During the paraxy pulse is low, with the body cold, and ofter covered with clammy perspiration. Death does not often reanlt from the first seizure, but the malady tends to return at more or less remote intervals, generally proving fata at last. There are several varieties of it: an organic and a functional form ; and again a pure or idiopathic and a complex or sym pathetic one have been recognised. Angina is produced by disease of the heart. It specially attacks elderly persons of plethoric gpectals, hanits, med are walking, and yet comin on more if they are runuing up-stairs Stimulants great eftort on asceane should be administered during tha continu ance of a paroxysm; but it requires a radical improvement of the general health to produce a permanent effect on the disorder.

Chem. : Aniline was flrat obtained by distillng indigo with canstic potash. It occurs in the hesvy oils from coal-tar. It is prepared from benzene, $\mathrm{C}_{6} \mathrm{H}_{8}$, which is converted into nitrobenzane, $\mathrm{C}_{6} \mathrm{H}_{5}\left(\mathrm{NO}_{2}\right)^{\prime}$, by the setton of strong nitric acid. The nitrobenzene is reduced to sniliae by the sction of scetle scid and tron filings, or by sulphide of smmoniom. Anlliae is the basis of most of the coal-tsr colours It is an oily, colourless, refrsctive, volatile liquid, boiling at $182^{\circ}$. Its sp. gr. st $0^{\circ}$ is 1.036. It solidifies at $-8^{\circ}$ to 8 crystalliae msss whea exposed to the sir and light, it becomes brown. It is nearly iosoluble in wster, but dissolves in ether, alcohol, and beazene. It forms crystalline salts with seids. It does not turn red litmus paper blue. A slight trace of sniline gives a decp purple colour with $s$ solution of bleachiag powder. Aniliae with 8 solution of bleachiog powder. Aniline combines with the iodides of slcohol radicals like smines. The stoma of $\mathbf{H}$ united cals like smines. The stoms of H united to N in sniline can be replsced by alcoho radicals, as athyl aniline\mathrm{C}_{2} \mathrm{H}_{5} .

The $H$ to the benzol ring $\left(\mathrm{C}_{6} \mathrm{H}_{5}\right)$ can also be replaced by radicals forming substitution compounds of aniline, of which, when one stom of H is replaced by an atom of Cl or a radicsl, there caa be always three modifi cations: thus, three modifications of nitroaniline $\left(\mathrm{C}_{6} \mathrm{H}_{4}\right)\left(\mathrm{NO}_{2}\right)\left(\mathrm{NH}_{2}\right)$ are known; slso chloraniline, $\mathrm{C}_{6} \mathrm{H}_{4} \mathrm{Cl}\left(\mathrm{NH}_{2}\right)$, and bromaniline, $\mathrm{C}_{6} \mathrm{H}_{4} \mathrm{Br}\left(\mathrm{NH}_{2}\right)$. [See Keknlé's Organic Chem. M. Langorrois has found that the putrefaction and decomposition of animal mstter can be prevented, even when it is exposed to the air and in an elevated temperature, by the use of amall quantities of aniline. ## 1. Literally:

1. To heat a metal with the view of regulating its elastleity, or glass to render it less britfie, or to fix colonrs in it. When a metal sto be annealed it is raised to a temperature lower than the one necessary to temper it, and then allowed to cool slowly. The elastictty of the metal is thus diminiahed. Eprings have thns imparted to them the precise measure of clasticity which is deemed the moat uitable. Glass is similarly ennealed. It is arst beated, asd then allowed to cool slowly (See Ganot's Physics, 8rd ed., 1868, p. 63.)

ăn-nĕ1'-1̆-da, s. pl. [Lat. annellus, or anellus $=$ a little ring, dimin. of annulus, or anulus $=$ a ring.] A class of animals bclouging to the sub-kingdem Articulata, the Anoulose of some naturalists. They are sometimes called Redblooded Worms, beiag the only iavertebrated animale possessing this character. They are sort-hodied snimals, mostly living in the water, sometines in moist earth, but never parasitically within the bodies of other animals; the higher ones possessing limbs, though of a rudimentary character, which makes them resemble centipedes; whilst the lower ones, like the lecehes, are wholly destitata of these eppendages. The respiration is effected by external branchice, by internal vesicles, or by the akin itself. Contractile vessels sapply the place of a heart. The nervons system consists of a single or donble ventral cord, furnished with ganglia at intervals, sud surrennding the cesophagus above. Cuvier divided them into three ordcrs-Tubjcola, Dorsibranchia, and Abranchia; MilncEdwards into Suctoria, Terricola, Tobicola, add Errantes ; Prefesbor Huxley into Chattophora and Discophora; and Griffith and Henfrey iato Turbellaria, Suctoria (Apoda), and Chætopoda (Setigera). [Annellata.]

 anellus, annellus $=$ a little ring. 1 A neme oometimes given to the class of animals called by Cuvier Annelida. It is thus used in the first edition of Owen's Comparat. Anat. of the Invertebrate Animals (1843), but in the second edition (1855) Annulata is the term used.

2. In the same sense as B., Arithmetic, Law, &c. (Far example, see Annuitant.)

B. Technically

1. Arithmetic, Law, ©c.: A sum of mouey which, sccording to the etymology, should be paid annually, but is more frequently settled half-yearly or quarterly, given to one as a superannuation or other allowance for services rendered, in which case it is synonymous with a pension, or in considerstion of its value in money paid beforehsad. Under the Roman law annuitles were sometimes granted by will, the obligation of psying them belng imposed upon the heir. Borrowers in the Middle Ages were frequently obliged to grant snnuities, in lieu of interest, the exaction of which by creditors was forbidden as usury ; and the practice received the Pspal sanction in the fifteenth century.
Annuities may be primarily divided into annuities certain and life annuities
An annuity certain is one in which the annual payment doea not depend upon say contingent event, but is to be made certaia either in perpetuity or during a period named. A perpetual annuity, or perpetuity, differs from interest in thie respect, that the purchaser of the former cannot demand back the principal, Whilst if he has put his money out at interes he can. He may, however, sell his annuity to some one else, which is tantamount to obtaining the principal bsck. The other original party to the transaction can, as a rule, at any time terminste the abligation to pay the annulty by giving back the principsl.

A life annuity, often called simply an annuity, is one payable during the lifetime of the snnuitant or annuitants. An immediate annuity ia one commencing at once, and payable whenever the stipulated period for the handing over of the first instalment arrives. A deferred or reversionary annuity is one of which the payments are not to commence till after the lapse of a considerable period. A man of forty, for example, may make provision for his declining years by purchasing an annuity not to commence till he is sixty, if he live so long. A temporary or terminable annuity is one which will ceasc at a certain stipulated time, say in twenty years, or st the death of an individual. The term or period for which it is to continue is generally called its status. An annuity not to commence till after a certain period, and then to continue for ever, is called a deferred perpetuity. Under the English system of finance all Government anhuities on the lives of individuals are terminabla annuities; whilst the fntereat of the national debt, which is also called an annuity, is a perpetual one. It does not sease till that portion of the principal is paid off. An annuity in possession is one whicb has already commenced. A joint annuity on two lives is one payable only till one of the parties diea. Sometimos, again, ant annuity is purchased which it is stipulated Ghall continue till two persons who are to receive it are hoth dead. The holder of an receive it are both dead. The holder of an annuity is called an annuitant; the person on annuity is called anannuitant; the person on whose life the annuity depends, the nominee; sad the annual aum paid, the rent or the magnitude of the annuity.
The calculation of annuities falls under the province of arithmetic. A perpetual annuity is easily calculated, the yearly payments of principal given for its purcluse. To calculate a life annuity it is needful to ascertain the probability of life in one of the age snd sex of the applicant for an annuity. [Probability, Expectation, Life, Mortality.] The other Expectation, Life, Mortality.] The other element ia what compound interest the sum paid for the purchase of the annuity would fetch during the number of years that the life is likely to continue.

The principles on which the value of annuities certain is calculated, are applicable also to the case of leasehold property.
The subjoined table ghowa the value of an annuity of $£ 1$ per sanum, estimated on the life of a male or of a femsle, at the aeveral

1. Ord. Lang. \& Entom.: The name given to certain amall, but singularly intelligent zad industrious insects well known in this and other lands. They are classed by naturalists uoder Hetcrogyna, tha first tribe of aculeated Hymenoptera. Ants live in society like the more common species of wasps and bees. Like them also, their polity consists of bees. Like them aiso, their polity consists of three kinds of individuals, males, females, and three kinds of individuals, males, females, and neuters, tha last-named being probtoly zbortively-formed females. The males are winged during the whole course of their existence, the females only during tha pairing season, sad the neuters not at all. The males and females meet uot on the ground, but in the air. Soou afterwards the males, which cannot do much for themsel yes, having neither stings nor even mandibles, perish of cold or other hardships. The females, on tbe contrary, tmmediately after meeting with the other sex in the air, lose or actually pull off their wings, are found by neutera, and become the object of their tender care. The neuters are the most numerous class of ants, and do nearly the whole work of the community. specially, they carry the eggs, the larve, sod the cocoons from place to place to the nest, as the temperature and moisture vary; they feed the larvar with liquid diagorged from the stomach, and besides open the cocoons for them when they sre ready to omerge as perfect insects. Heace the neutersare somatimes .called workers or nurse-ants. Sir John Lubbock saya that aots can distiaguieh colors, being particularly sensitive to violet. They have very delicata amell, but apparatly no hava very dalicafa amell, but apparacay no hearing. Tha different ppecies present curious analogiea to tha earlier atages of human progreess-the hunting and pastoral, and even the agricultural-as bas been noted by sevaral authorities. Thera ara varioua geners and species of ants, differing in habits and methoda of operation. Some, like Forsaica sanguinaria sad $F^{\prime}$. cespitum, have been called Mining-ants; others, aa $F$. flava, produce $s$ kind of masonry; while $F$. ruft, the Wood-snt, similarly addresses itself to carpeatry. Finally, some anta keep aphides as gradiers do milch cows, on account of a secretion which they yield; and others hold slaves, the eggs, larve, and pupse of which they have captured in war. Of these the most notahle ts the Amazon-ant.

Both are South American.

The Scaly Ant-eaters are of an allied geaus, Manis. They derive their English name from the fact that they are covered with thick acales, which give them the aoperficial appearanca of reptiles. The Short-tailed appearanca of reptices. Lhe short-talled Manis, M. pentadactyla, Linu., is found in Bengal snd the lndian Archipeligo, zod M. tetradactyla in Africa. The proper and scaly Ant-eaters belong to the mammalisn order of Edentata, or toothless animals. To the same order belong the Cape Ant-eaters (Orycteropus Capensis. [Aaro-vank.] Prof. Owen conaiders it remarkable that "oot a trace of a Scaly Ant-eater, recent or extinct, has been diacovered in South America, where the Edentate order is so richly repreaented by otber generic and apecific forms." (Owen: British Fossil Mammals and Birds, 1846, p. xxxix.)

The Parcupine Ant-eater, or Aculeated Anteater (Echidna Hystriz), is not closely allied to tha species now mentioned, but is one of the Monotremats. [EcainNa.]

2 The much more remarksble erections made by different species of termites (white ants). In most cases the deacriptions of unacientific travellers refer to these rather than to the constructions of the ante proper. The nest of the African Termes bellicosus is de scribed by Sparrmann es rising ten or twelve feet above the surface of the earth. Its shape is that of a eugar-loaf. Externslly it is covered with e brosd cap, whilst Inside it is divided ioto a multitude of cbsmbers. The apecies are called Ant-fions from tha extraordisary habits of their larva, which construct a funnel-ahaped pitfall in the samd or duaty ground, at the bottom of which they bury themselves all hut their antenna. When snts or other insects are hurrying along they sre apt to misa their balance and tumble into the pitfalls, where they are at once devoured. It is sajd that when they do not quite lose their equilibrium on the brink of the abyss, they are helped into the jaws of death by a shower of sand or dust flung up from below. Ant-liona occur in the south of Europe, in India, \&c. ant-thrushes, $\dagger$ ant-catchers, ant eaters, s. pl. Names given to tho severs species of lirds placed by Illiger under his genus Myiothera, and some of its inmediat allies, They belong to the family Turdidat and the sub-famity Formicatinæ, called Myo therine by Swainson. They live on insects, especially on ants. They are found in both coutinents, but those of the Old World have the more brilliant plumage. I. Natural Science:

1. Gen: The acience of man in the widest sense of the terma. The word anthropology Ggures in Johnson's Dictionary with the signi flcation, "The doctrine of anatomy; the doc trine of the form and structure of the body of man." The Glossographia Nova, 2nd ed., ex plains it to be " a discourse or description of a man or of a man's body." Ksint gave a much wider rance than this to the ambject in his $A n$ thropologie published about the year 1798 , as he had previously done orally in hia univer sity lectures. Finally, the Anthropological Society of London defined its aim to be "' to Society of London defined its aim to study man in all his leading aspects, physical mental, and historical, to investigate the law of his origin aod progress, to ascertain hi place in nature, and his relation to the inferior forms of life." In this aedse cthnology is a department of anthropology
 AII the naturnd seiences - Max Mit
2. Spec.: The science which investigates the relation in which man stands to the inferior animals. 10 this senae ethnology is a cognate science to anthropology. Dr. Latham uses the word in thia limited aense.

Properly: The attributing of a human form to God. When this is really done it is a gross degradation of the divinity, and is condemned in Scripture But when the only anthropomorphism is the use of metaphorical phrases, such as the arm of the Lord (Ps. xxvii. 15), or his eyes (Ps. xi. 4), or his ears (Ps. xxxis: 15), to make abstract ideas more (Ps. xxxis. 15), to make abstract ideas niore readily conceivable, the practice has the countenance of Scripture itself. There are countenance of scripture itself. There are mate anthropomorphism.

Church History: A Scottish sect which arose in 1747. A certain oath having been inatituted in Edinhurgh, Glasgow, and Perth, to be taken as s criterion of burghership, many members of the Associate Synod, or Secession Church, considered its terms to be such that they could not conscientiously take it. Others declared that they could. Ths Secession in consequence split into distinct bodies-the "Burghers," who took the oath, and the "Anti-burghers," who refused it. Aoother schism ultimately followed, owing to the coafict between progresaive and conservative idets; snd thus there were produced fonr distinct denominations-viz., the old Light Burghers, the New Light Burghers, the Old Light Anti-burghers, sod the New Light Antiburghers. Most of these are now merged iv the United Preshyterian Church, and their old denominationa are becoming obsolete. (Burton: Hist. Scotland.)

ăn-tǐ-mŏn'ice, a. [Eng. antimony; ice] Pertaining to antimony or containing antimony.
Antimonic chloride, or antmony pentachloride, $\mathrm{ShCl}_{5}$, is obtained as a colourless volatile fuming liqnid by passing excesa of chlorine over the metal or tha trichloride. On distillation it decomposes into $\mathrm{SbCl}_{3}$ and $\mathrm{Cl}_{2}$.
Antimonic tetroxide, or antimonoso-ontimonic oride, $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{4}$ or $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3} . \mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$, obtained cāte, fät, färe, amidst, whãt, fâll, father ; wē, wĕt, hëre, camẹl, hẽr, thêre; pīne, pĭt, sïre, sir, marine; gõ, pðt

by heating the metal or trioxids. It is a yellow infusible non-volatile powder, Insoluble in acids, but dissolves in alkaliea.

Atutimonic oxide, $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$. Obtained by the action of $\mathrm{HNO}_{3}$ on the metal. It is a yellow insoluble powder, which by heat is converted into the tetroxide. Its hydrate forms salts called antimoniates; those formed from the hydrates of the trioxide ara called antimonites. By adding water to antimonic chloride, $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{Cl}_{5}$, a hydrate is precipitated called metontimonic acid, $\mathrm{H}_{4} \mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{7}$. The scid solium metantimoniate, $\mathrm{Na}_{2} \mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{Bb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{7}+6 \mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{O}$, is insoluble in water.

ăn-tǐ-mò'-ni-oŭs, a. [Eng. antimony; -ous.] Containing as oue of its ingredients antimony. Antimonious chloride, or antimony trichloriite, $\mathrm{SbCl}_{3}$, called also butter of antimony. By dissolving the metal or the sulphide in atrong HCl , and distilling the liquid, $\mathrm{SbCl}_{3}$ volatilises and forms a white crystalline mass.
Antimonious oxide, or antimony trioxide, $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$. Obtained by decomposing $\mathrm{SbCl}_{3}$ with an alkaline carbonate. It is a colourless powder, crystallising in octohedra; it becomes yellow when hated, melts at red heat, and olatises in a close vessel, but sbsorbs oxygen from the air, snd becomes $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{4}$. Antimonious oxide dlssolves in cream of tartar, forming tartar emetio, or potasaium antimony tartarate, $\left.\mathrm{XC}_{4} \mathrm{H}_{4} \mathrm{~K}(\mathrm{ShO}) \mathrm{O}_{6}\right)+\mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{O}$
Antimontous sulphide, $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{3}$, occurs nstive as a lead-grey, shining, crystalline, beittle mineral; sp. gr. 48; easily fusible, and a good conductor of electricity. It is used in horse medicine and in Bengal lights. When precipitated by $\mathbf{H}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$ it is an orange-red powder, which is soluble in ammonium sulphide. Kermes mineral is a mixture of $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{y}$ and $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$. Sulph-antimonites are compounds of $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{3}$ with basic sulphides.
Antimony pentasulphide, or antlmonic sulphide, $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{5}$, is a yellow-red powder obtained by decomposing sodiura sulphantimoniate, $\mathrm{a}_{3} \mathrm{SbS}_{4}$, a crystalline substance.

Mn'tili-mön-y, s. [In Ger. antimon, antimonium; Sw. \& Mediæv. Lat, antimonium Fr. antimoine, wrongly sald to be made up onti = against, and moine $=$ monk. This orm is said to have arisen from the fact that the celebrated alchemiat Basil Valentine, who was a German monk, having observed that hogs fattened on antimony, administered sone of it to render a similar service to hia ellow monks, but found the well-meant pia scription attended by fatal results. The narrative is evidently mythic. Hence Morin derives it from Gr. ävi (anti) = against, and $\mu$ óvos (monos) $=$ alone, becanse it is not found alone; an improbable etymology. The word is probably of Arabic origin. In Class. Lat. stibium or atimmi, Gr. $\sigma$ tiuhu (stimmi), is $=$ anti mony, or rather sesquisulphuret of antimony.]

I Chemistry: Antimony is a triad metallic element, but in some less stable compound it appears to be pentad. Symbol, $\mathrm{Sb}_{\text {: }}$ atomic weight, $122 ;$ sp. $\mathrm{gr}, 6.8$; melting-point, $450^{\circ}$ It can be distilled, hit takes fra when strongly heated in the alr, forming $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$. Antimony heated in the air, forming $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$. Antimony is a bright bluish-white, brittle, easily pulis a bright bluish-white, brittle, easily pulcervanite, $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{4}$; alao as volentinite and semar monite, $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$. The metal is ohtained by heating tha sulphide with balf its weight of metallie iron, or with potassium carbonate. It ia oxidised by nitric acid, forming $\mathrm{Sb}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$. Type metad is an alloy of lead with twenty per cent. of antimony. Finely powdered antimony takes fire when thrown into chlorine gas. It forms three oxides: (1) Antimony Trioxide, or Antimonions Oxide; (2) Antimonic Tetroxide, or Antimonoso-antimonic oxide; and (3) Antimonic Oxide. (See these words.) Antimony also forms bases with alcohol radicals, as Trimethylstiline, $\mathrm{Sb}\left(\mathrm{CH}_{3}\right)_{3}$ Salts of antimony are used in medicine; in iarge doaes they are poisonous. Antimony is detected by the properties of its s11]phide, chloride, and of $\mathrm{SbH}_{3}$. It is precipitated by metallic zinc and iron from its solutions as a black powder. Copper is covered by a metallic film. Antimony salts, when fused on charcoal with $\mathrm{Na}_{2} \mathrm{CO}_{3}$, give a white incrustachionsasd a brittle metallice bead, converted hy tion and a brittle metallic bead, converted hy nitric acid into a white oxide soluble in boiling aolntion of cream of tartar. Antimony is precipitated by hydric sulphide, $\mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$ (see A valysia), as an orange-red powder, snlphide of antimony, $\mathrm{SbS}_{3}$, which is soluble in sulphide of ammonium, again precipitated by hydrochloric acid. With potash the solution of trichloride of antimony gives a white precipitate of the trioxide, soluble in large excess. Ammonia gives the same precipitate, which is iosoluble in large excess ; but if tartaric acid is present these precipitates dissolve easily. A liquid containing antimony salts, treated by zine and dilute sulphuric scid, yields antimoninretted hydrogen, $\mathrm{SbH}_{3}$, which burns with a bluiah tinge. A deposit of antimony takes place on a cold porcelain plate held in the flame. This metalic film may be deatroyed from arsenic by diaaolving it in aqua regia, and the solution treated with $\mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$, which gives the characteristic orange sulphide. Or moiaten the metallic film with nitric acid, evaporate the scid without boiling, 3 white depoait of triexide of antimony re maina, which gives a black apot with ammonionitrate of silver. A film of arsenic treated in the same way gives either a yellow precipitate of arsenite or a red-brown precipitate of arseniate of silver.
II. Mineralogy: Antimony occura native, necasionally alloyed with a minute portion of silver, iron, or arsenic. Its crystals are rhombohedral ; hardneas, 3-3.5; sp. gr., 6.62 to 6.72 ; its luatre is metallic; its colour and streaks tin white. It is very brittle. It occurs in Sweden, Germany, Austria, Frsnce Borneo, Chili, Mexico, Canada, sud New Brunswick.
Arsenical Antimony: A minersl, called also Allemontite (q.v.).

Butter of Antimony: A name formerly given to the trichloride, or Antimonious chloride, the formula of which is SbCl . It is a white highly crystalline rass, very deliquescent. It is used as a caustic for foot-rot in aheep.

III. Phurmacy:

Black Antimony consists of native sulpbide of antimony fused and afterwards powdered. It is not itaelf naed as a drug, but is employed in prepering tartar emetic, sulphurated antimony, and terchloride of antimony. It is given to horaes as an alterative powder: 2 parts of aulphur, 1 of saltpetre, and one of black antimony. It is used in the preparation of Bengal signal lights : 6 parts of saltpetre, 2 of sulphur, and 1 of black antimony.

Chloride of Antimony: $\mathbf{S b C l}_{5}$. A solution of it is used as a canstic and escharotic ; it is never giveu internally.

Sulphurated Antimony consists of sulphide of antimony with a sunall sdmixture of oxide of antimony. It enters into the composition of componnd calomel pilla.

I. Literally :

1. Spec.: The following fourteen booka:
 Vil. Ecclesexisstiens, anlied nito the Wlatom of Jenus, the non of Sirach, VIII. Baruek IX. The Song of cabees
Most of the above-mentioned books were composed during the two centuries immediately preceding the birth of Christ, though some were penned, or at least laterpolated, at a later period. They were written not in Hebrew or Aramean, but in Greek ; and the Jews never accorded them a place in the old Testanent canon. They wera inserted in the Septuagiat, and thence passed to the Latin Volgate. The Christisa fathers were divided in sentiment as to their valus and the relation they stood to the canonical old Testament books; Jerome dealing with them in a free, enlightened, and discriminating manner; whilst Augustine and others were much less independent. The question whether or not they were inspired remained an open one till the Reformation. Wickliff, whose mind was cast in what we should now call a wonderfully Proteatant mould, was against them; , 0 was Luther: and yet more atrongly, Calvio, with his followers. To uphold their waning authority, the Council of Treat, oo the 8th of April, 1546, placed them on an equal level with Scripture, anathematising all who held the contrary opinion. Portions of them are in the New as well as In the Old Lectionary of the English Church ; but the aixth of the Thirty-pine Articles explains that "the other Books" [the fourteen enumerated], "as Hierome safth, the Church doth read for example of life and instruction of manners, but yet doth it not apply them to establish any doctrine." The Weatminster Confession of Faith regarda them as simply human writings, and dentes them all authority. The several apocryphal books are of unequal merit. Ist Maccabees is a highly valuable history; while Bel and the Dragon is a monstrous fahle. Taking them as a whole, they throw much light on the religious opiniona and the political state of the Jewa before the advent of Christ, and explain not a little which else would be obscure in the New Testament.

"We bold not the Apocrypha for sacred, as we do the boly Scripture but for human oompooitlons" Hooker.

Logic（lit．＝from that which is after）：An argument which reasons back ward from effects to causes，from observed facts to the law of nature which explains them，or in aome similar way．If one infer，from marks of design in nature，that there must be a Debigner， the argument is one a posteriori．It is opjonsed to the a priori argument，which more ambi－ tiously attempta to reason ont new facts from previonsly ascertained lawa of ngture，or from abstract conceptions．Though this latter pro－ cess will sometimes brillisntly anticipate dis covery，yet it is liable to lead one sstrgy ；and the immense advance made during the last two centuries by physieal science bas arisen mainly from its resolute adherence to the à posteriori method of reasoning．［A Priori， Deduction，induction．］

-Gum arabic, or gum acacis, is an exadation from B. As substantive: The language of Arabis or of the Arabs. It is properly the dialect of the Koreishite tribe in Arabia, rendered claskic by its being the lsnguage in which the Koran was composed. It is now vernacular iu Arabia, Egypt, and Northern Africa, and the leamed and saered tongue of all Mohammedsn countries. The numbers who at present speak it have been estimated at 100 millions, which is probubly en exsggeration. Philologically viewed, Arabic is the most goutherly of the Syro-Arabian fanily of languagea, besides being itself the type of one of the three classes into which that leading family of tongues is divided. Associated with it in this relation are the living Amharie and the dead Ethiopic and Himyaritic tongues. About two-thirds of the Hebrew roota occur with slight modification in Arable, which renders the language nseful to the Biblical student, as its wide diffusion does to the missionary; while numerous chemical, alchemical, astronomical, and astrological words which arose during the brilliant, but brief, period when the Saracens simed at intellectual as well as political ascendsncy, will always render it an objeet of interest to scientific nien. ## B. Technically:

I. Arch.: A series of wedge-bhaped stones or bricks, so arranged over a door or window in an ediffice for habitation, or between the piers of a bridge, as to support each other, and even besr a great superincumbent weight.
The stones and bricke of a truncated wedge ahape used in huilding arches are called roussoirs. The sides of an arch are called its haunches or flanks, and by old English writers of the sixteenth century its hance. The highest part of the arch skeen, from the Italian schiena. The lowest voussoirs of an arch are called springers, and the centrel one which holds the rest together the keysione. The undar or concave gide of the vousaotrs is called the intrados, and the outer or convax one the exirados of the arch A chord to the arch at ite lower part is called ite span, and a line drawn at right angle to this chord, and extending npwards to ite summit, is called its height.

The impost of an arch is the portion of the pier or abutment from which the arch aprings. If the height of the crown of an arch above the level of its impost is greater than half the apan of the arch, the arch is asid to be surmounted. If, on the contrary, it is less, then the arch is said to be surbased.
The curved arch Was known to the Assyriane and the Old Egyptiane, Sir J. G Wilkinson cousiders that it exiated in brick in the reign of Amenoph I., ahout B.C. 1540 , and in atone in the time of Pammetichus II, B.C. 600 . The evidence is derived from the Buina of actual buildings, but paintings appear ruina of actual buildings, but paintings appear to carry the areh back to about 2020 B.C. There is no mention of the gennine arch in Scripture, the term " arches," in Ezek. xl. 16, being a mistranslation.
The arch was brought into extensive use by the Romana, and everywhere prevailed till the twelfth century A.D., when the arch pointed at the apex, and called in consequence tha pointed arch-the one so frequently seen in Gothic architecture-appeared In Europe as its rival. The forms of both curved and pointed arches may be indefinitely varied. Of

1. The employment of the bow and arrows In battle, in hunting, or for other purposes. The art is of great antiquity. It is mentioned in Gen. xxi. 20 , and in the liad and the Odyssey, besides being depicted on Egyptian monuments and Assyrian scupptures. The Philistines seem to hive excelled in it, which caused David to lasue orders that special instruction and training in it should beinuparted to the Hebrewe (2 Sam. i. 18). There were archers in both the Greek and Roman anmies. In Englend, up to the time when gumpowder came into general use, the archers constituted some of the most formidable soldiers in the English army, several of the battles won over the Scots having been gained by their surpassing skill in the nse of the bow. The weapon first employed was the arbalest, or cross-bow [arbalest]; afterwards the long bow aupplanted it, the change taking place some time before the reign of Edward 11 . The Scottish! "Royal Company of Archers" still claim the right of acting as the Soverelgn's body-guard in Scotland; but, picturesque as they may look in a procession, it is to be loped, both for their own and the monarch'e sake, that they may never have to test the powers of their antique weapon against those of the breech-loading rifie.

tube wound around a long cylinder. The machine, which was originally designed for raising water from the Nile, was slanted ao that one end of the spiral tube was beneath the water of the river, and the other rested on the bauk. The inside of the tube really congisted of an inclined plane, down which the water fiowed, though to a superficial ohserver it seemed to flow up in contravention of the lawa of gravity. It was, of course, unable to act if slanted to the water at too high an angle. It is now disused, one aerious defect which it has being that it is apt to become clogged up with wceds, mnd, stones, &e., which cannot easily be removed from a tube of spiral form.

I. Properiy, the art of buidding ; more specifically, the art of building homan habitations, temples, or edifices of any kind, whether humble or splendid. The term is generslly, however, limited to the art of erecting edifices which, besides answering their primary purpose of utility, are fitted by heauty, hy aymmetry, and in other ways, to please the eye and gratify the mind. About half a century ago it was common to limit the aignification atill farther to bulldinga constructed after Greek or Romsn models; but this unduly narrow meaning is now abandoned. Arehitecture, like other arts, carries ont the principlea of science, and must rest upon them. So conof sinually, indeed, does it draw upon geometry, that it might almost itself be called a science. The architecture of a people is an index of their mental and moral qualities, and of the atate of civilisation which they have reached. Fergusson conaiders it also more trustworthy than language in settling the question of race. The numerous styles of architecture, partly diverse, partly connected with each other, may be primarily divided into Ethnic and Christian. The following is a more minute classiflcation:-In Ancrica two styles of arcfil-classifcation:-In America two styles of arciliand the Peruvian. The Chineae hava one in and the Peruvian. The Chineas have one in Eastern Asia. In India there sre two totall distinct races-an Aryan one [ARyan], of which the Brahmsna are the type, snd a Turanian one, represented by the Tamuls of the Coromandel coast and Ceyion. The latter were the great builders. Fergusson recognises in India a Booddhist, a Jaina, a Southerm Hindoo, a Northern Hindoo, a Modern IIndoo, and a Cashmerian style. In Weatern Asia there existed, at a more or less remote period, a Phoenician, a Jewish, an Assyrian, a Babylonian, & Persepolitan or Persian, snd a Saslonian, a Persepolitan or Persian, shian type of building; whilst in Europe there were Pelasgian or Cyclopean, Etruscan. there were Pelasgian or Cyclopesn, and Druidical or Celtic types. A celebrated style commenced in Egypt as the Egyptian style; transferred to Grcece, and modifled there by Assyrian, it was called Grecian, ant became & model for universal imitation. Adopted by the Romans, it was called Roman. Passing from tbem, it gave rise in one direc. tion to the Saracenic, Arabian or Moresque, and in snother to the Christian style, the latter with Romanesque, Gothic, and Byzantine sub-divisions. [Saracenic, Gothic, &e.]

IThe subject now treated genarally, called simply Architecture, is sometimes more precisely described as Civil Architecture, in which case there sre at least two others, viz. Milicase there are st least two others, viz., Architecture, treating of the construction of fortifleations, and Naval Architecture, thie of fortifleations, and Naval Architecture, the subject of which is the construction not merely of shipg, hut of harbours, docks, or aught else requisite to promote maritime enterpriss. In this division the term civil is used vaguely, so as to include Ecclesiasiical Architecture, but more frequently the two are made distinct.

1. A fixed star of the first magnitude, called alsa a Boatis. It is one of the very brightest stars in the Northern heavens. In March 1635, Morin saw it in the west for more than half an hour after sunrise. To find it, draw a line through the tail of the Bear four times the length of the distance between the stara Mizar and Benctnasch in the diagram below. The anclents conaldered it a red atar. Piarzi could not find it hsd any parallax. Though nominslly " ifxed," yet it has a proper angular motion of $2.250^{\prime}$, equivalent to 53.32 miles in a second. In 752 years it altered its latitude 5 , and in twenty centuries, according to Humboldt, it has moved 23 timea the diameter of the moon's disc. In 1803, Herschel found its diameter, seen through a fog, $\frac{3}{}$ of a second, from which he calculated its diameter to be not less than $8,000,000$ leagues $=$ $24,000,000$ milea. arithmetical oomplement. That which a number wants to make it reach the next highest decimal denomination. Thus the arithmetical complement of 4 is 6 , for $4+6$ ara $=10$, and that of 642 is 338 , because $642+358$ are $=1,000$. The arithmetical complement of a logarithm is what it wanta to make it reach 10 .

arithmetical mean

1. The number, whether it be an luteger or a fraction, which is exactly intermediate between two others. Thus, 5 is the arithmetical mean between 2 and 8 ; for $2+3$ are $=5$, and $5+3$ are $=8$. To flad sucb \& mean, add the two numbers together, and divide their sum by 2 ; thus $2+8=10$, and $10 \div 2=5$.
2. More loosely: Any one of several numbers in an arithmetical ratio (q.v.) interposed between two other numbers. Thus, if 6,9 , and 12 be intarposed between 3 and 15, any one of them may be called an arithmetical mean between these twu numbers.
arithmetical progression. A aeriea of numbers increasing or diminishing uniformly by the same number. If they increase, the arithmetical progression is said to be ascending, and if they decrease, descending. Thus the seriea 3, 6, $9,12,15$ is an ascending arithmetical progression mounting up by the continued addition of 3 ; and the series 8,6 , 4, 2 , is a descending ons, falling ragularly by 2. [Progheasion.]
arithmetical proportion. The relation existing between four numbers, of which the first is as mnch greatar or less than the second, as the third is than the fourth; the equality of two differences or arithmetical ratios. In auch cases the eum of the extreme is $\equiv$ that of the meatis. [Proportion.] arithmetical proportionais. The numbers so related to each other. (The term ts opposed to geometric proportionals.) (ProPORTIONAL.] arithmetical relation. The comparison of numbers in an arithmetical progression with the view of ascertaining how much they differ from each other.

A. Ordinary Language:

1. Lit, : Dafensiva arms; a covaring designed to protect the body, eapecially in war, from being injured by any weapon the foe could use. In the authorised version of the Bihle it is frequently mentioned under Its appropriate name ( $1 \mathrm{Sam} . \mathrm{xvii} .54$; I Kings xxii, 38, \&c.) and several times under the pane harmess, which was a term for armor common during the fifteenth and airteenth centuries (1 Kings xx. 11 ; xxii. 34; 2 Chron.ix. 24). [Harness.] The heroes of the Trojad war are described by Homer as wearing it. It was in nse among the other pations of antiquity, but it was not till the age of chivalry that it reached its full development. From the liat of pieces of arnor enumerated in the subjoined example, quoted by Narea from Warner, it can be well nederstood that a knight "in compleat armonr" was too well protacted to be in much danger from a foe, and too nowieldy to put that foe in moch danger. Mail ormor was in use from $106 i i^{\text {to }}$ 1300. It was tegulated, cousiating of little imbricated plates sewn npon a hauberk withont aleeves or hood; ringed or chain, consisting of futerlocking rings; gamboised, consisting of padded work stitched; scaled, of small circular plates like fish scales. Mized armor to 1410 chain and plate. Plute arnaor to 1600 , composed of large plates, and entirely enclosing the body. Ilalf armar to eiphteenth century, conaisting of helmet and boily armor only. Armur has almost disappeared in modern warfare, its has aly rominant being the defence againat aword only remnant belag the defence againat sword blows worn ly cavalry. Recently, howaver, a

II. Law: Anything which one takes in his hand in anger to strike another with or throw at him. Pistols and swords are, of course, arms in the legal acusc, but so also are stones and sticks.
III. Herallyy, Armorial bearings: In the days when knights were so encased in armonr that no means of identifying them was left, the practice was introduced of painting their tosignia of hononr on their shield, as an easy method of distinguishing them. For a time these wera granted only to individuals, but Richard I., during his crusade to Palestine, made them hereditary. The reason why they are called coats of arms is that they used to be introduced on the surcoat of their possessor, but the term once Introduced was afterwards retained even when they were displayed elsewhere than on the coat. These are usually divided into (1) public, as those of kingdoms, provinces, bishoprics, corporste bodies, &c. and (2) private, being those of privats families. These again ara separated into many subdivisions, founded mainly on the varied methods by which arms can be acquired. [Asthods by which arms can be scquired. [As-dinarily a person can be arrested only by a warrant from a justica of the peace; but there are exceptional cases in which he can be spprehended by an officer without & warrant, by & privste person also without a warrant, or by what is technically called a hue and cry. An arrest is made by touching the body of the person accused, sad after this is done a bailife may break open the houss in which he is to take him; but without so touching him first it is illegal to do so. The ohject of arrest being to make sury that lie snswers to a charge sbout to be brought against him, it does not follow thst after being seized he is incarcerated; if bail for his appearance ot the proper time be given, and the case be not too aggrsvated & onl for such security to be sccepted, he will be released till the dsy of trisl. The privilege of exemption from arrest is granted to peers of the realm, members of Parliament, and corporations, clerks, attorneys, and others sttending the courts of justice, clergymen whilst sctually engaged in performing divina eervice, and some other classes. No arrest can take place on Sunday, except for treason, felony, or breach of the peace.

Natal arrowroot has given much tronble to the public analysts, owing to the granules aomewhat resembling those of potato-starch. It has, however, been lstely proved to be a genuine Maranta starcb.

Portland arronoroot: A name applied to a atarch prepared, qome years ago, in Portland, from the roots of the Arum maculatum. It is not now an article of commerce.

I Arrowroot is adulterated either by the mixing together of various qualities of arrowroot, or by the admixture of other atarches, such as potato or tapioca. Neither of these methods renders the arrowroot deleterious; methods renders then we consider that the price of the different qualities of genuine arrowroot varies from 6d. to 2s.6d. per pound, and that the prics of potato or tapioca flour seldom exceeds 6d. ner pound, we then see how the public may be cheated in pocket. The sdulterstion by potato or tapioca four is readily detected by the microscope.

B. Technically:

1. Chem. Arsenic is a trisd seml-metallic element, but it may be a pentsd in some of its compounds. Symbol, As; stomic weight, 75 ; vapour denaity, $150(\mathrm{H}=\mathrm{I})$; atomic volume, ; ; sp. gr. 5.75 . It volatilises when hested with out fusing, and ita vspour smells like garlic. It is obtained by distilling native alloys of arsenio and iron, copper, cobalt, or nickel also by heating srsenicus oxide $\left(\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}\right)$ with charcoal in earthen crucibles. Arsenic has a steel-grey metallic lustre, is very brittle, and crygtsllises in rhombohedrons. It unites with metals when fused with them, forming with metals when fused with them, formic is added to lead used for making ehot, to make added to lead used for making ehot, to make it run into regular globulea. Metallic arsenic it run into regular globules. Metallic arsenle is often called black arsenic, to distinguish it from the white arsenic of ahops, which is arsentous oxide. Arsenic forma two axides, arsenious oxide $\left(\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}\right)$ and arsenic oxide ( $\mathrm{AB}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$ ), butonly one chloride, $\mathrm{AsCl}_{3}$ (srsenious chloride). It is prepared by distilling one part of metallic arsenic with six parts of corrosive sublimste or arsenious oxide with atrong hydrochloric acid. It is a colourleas, oily, poisonous liquid. Arsenic umites with nascent hydrogen, forming hydride of arsentic, Ass ${ }_{3}$. Arsenic forms sulphides (q.Y.). It also forms Arsenic formas sulphides (q. Y.). It also forms organic bases (see Caconvi and Arsine). organic bases (see CAconvl and ARSINE). Arsenic is easily detected lin cases of peianing, srsenic, as traces occur in zinc and in mineral scids. Compounds of srsenic, when heated on charcoal, give off fumes of metallic arsenic recognised by its garlic-like smeli. If hested with charcesl in a test-tule it fortns a metallic ring. Arsenic is precipitated from solutions in the presence of hydrochloricacid by $\mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$ (ee ANALYSis), as a yellow sulphide, $\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{3}$, solut la in sulphide of smmonium, also in carbonate of ammonium. A piece of bright copper heated in s golution containing arsenfous oxide or an arsenite rendered acid by hydrochloric acid, becomea covered with a grey film of metallic srsenic. Any arsenic compound treated with aine and hydrochloric acid gives off arseniuretted hydrogen $\left(\mathrm{AsH}_{3}\right)$, which burns with a grey-blue fume, and deposits metallic arsenlo grey-blue amwe, and deposits metallic arsenlo may be distingniahed from antimony hy dissolving in hypochlorite of sodinm. Metallic arsenic, heated in a current of sir, yields the characteristic actohedral crystals of arsedious acid. Nitrate of silver givea \& rellow precipi tate with arsenites, and a brick-red one with arsenistes Arseniates requlre to he reduced or hested, before they are precipitated hy sulphuretted hydrogen. Arseniates give s white orystalline precipitate with magneaium mixture and ammonia like the phosphates.

2. Min Arsenic occurs astive in rhombohedral crystals, or massive, reticulated, reniform, and stalactitie. The hardness is 3.5 the sp. gr. 5.93 ; the lustre, sub-metallic; the colour and streak, tin-white, soon tarnishing dark grey. It oecurs with various metals in crystalline aod schistose rocke. It is found In Norway, Hungary, Sitesia, and the United 8tates. [For ather ores of it see Renlear, Orpiment, de]

armenic sulphides.

Chem.: There are three sulphldes-As $\mathrm{S}_{2}$ $\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{3}$, snd $\mathrm{AB}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{5}$

Disulphite of arsenic (As $\mathrm{S}_{2}$ ) occurs nstive as realgar ( $\mathrm{q} . \mathrm{v}$.). It can bs propared by melt ing inetallic arsenic with sulphur. It is used to prepare Indian white fire, a mixtime of twenty-four parts of nitre, seven parts of suiphur, and two parts of realgar. Heated with strong sulphurio acid, As $\mathrm{S}_{2}$ forms arsenious and sulphurous acids. It is used as a pigment.
Arsenious sulphide (Asps3) oceurs native as orpiment It is obtained in a pure stata by yassing hydrosulphnric scid ( $\mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$ ) through a solution of sn arsenite acidified by hydrochloric acid. Arsenions sulphite is used as a pigment, called King's Yellow, also as a a pigment

Arsenic sulphide $\left(\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{5}\right)$ does not exist in a separate state, but in combinstioe with metal lic sulphides, as sulpharsenates.
ar-sěn'-Ic, a. [Forned from the substantive but distingnished fron it by belng sccented on the second syllable instead of the first. In Fr. arsenique; Port. arseniaco.]
arsenic oxide, $\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$, called in the hydrated state arsenic acid. This compound is prepared by oxidising arsenious oxide with nitric scid, also by passing chlorine into arneous arsenious acid. Arsenic oxide forms three hydrates anslogous to phosphoric scid - monhydrate $\left(\mathrm{HAsO}_{3}\right)$, dihydrata $\left(\mathrm{H}_{4} \mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{7}\right)$, and trihydrate $\left(\mathrm{H}_{3} \mathrm{AsO}_{4}\right)$; the last forms salts isomorphous with ths phosphates Arsenic oxide, when strongly heated, is decomposed into arsenious oxide and oxygen, and is reduced to metallic arsenle by charcoal or cyanide of potassinm st red heat. St phurous snhydride, $\mathrm{SO}_{2}$ reduces $\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{5}$ to $\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$ Hydrosulphuric seid, $\mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$, passed through warm solution, acidified with hydrochloric acid, of arsenic acid or of an arsenate, gives precipitats of $\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{~S}_{3}+\mathrm{S}_{2}$. Arsenic oxide is used in dyeing and in preparing sniline colours. The salts of arsenic acid are called arsenates or arseniates. The salt of maghesium and ammonium is a white erystalline sslt like the corresponding phosphate. Nitrate of saver gives a hriek-red precipitate, and with bssic seetate of lead a white precipitate, which is redueed by hesting with ehsreoal with evolution of srsenic, recognised by the gariic-like smell.

Arsenic acid, 37 g; sesquioxide of Iron, $42 \cdot 1$; lime, I1 1 ; water, $8 \%=100$. It oecurs in France.
ar-sēn'-1̆oŭs, a. [Eng. arsenu(c); suff. -ous.] Pertaining to arsenic; having argenic as one of its constituents.
arsenious oxide, or arsenions anhydride, $\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$, csiled in the hydrated state arsenious acid. It is formed hy hurning arssnic in the sir, bat is ohtained by roasting srsenical nyrites, ores of tin, cobalt, \&e., which contain arsenic, in furmsee sumplied with gir, and condensing it. Araenious oxide erystallises in octohedra, It volatilises st it cos in is condensed on 8 hou suriace solnble in water than the crystalline variety: somble in warter than the crystaline variety: thirty parts of cold water; no definite hydrate exists. It is insolubls in aleohol and ether. Arsenious oxide is a violent irritant poison two grains producing death, but by com mencing with small doscs it is possible to take even four grains without injury. The Tyrolese eat arsenic to increass the power of thes respiratory organs, as they have to climb mountains. Arsenions oxide is ased in medicine in small doses in skio diseases. It is rapidly absorbed into the hlood when it is applied to a wound. The best antidote is obtained by adding magnesia to ferric chloride the mixturs of sesquioxide of iron and mag nesia can be used at once, without washing it Arsenious oxide reduces chromic acid, man ganic acid, \&e.; but it is reduced to metallic srsenic by potassium, charcoal, snlphur, and phosphoris st red heat. Arsenious oxide unites with bases forming arsenites, but they are not very stahle compounds. Their solutions give s yellow precipitste with argentic nitrate, soluble in acetic acid, also in caustie potash; a light-green precipitate (Scheele's green) with cupric salts. Aceto-arsenite of copper (Schwelnfurt green) is used as a plg ment for wall papera, and is very polsonous Arsenite of sodium, formed by dissolving $\mathrm{As}_{2} \mathrm{O}_{3}$ in canatic soda, la used to prepare the papers to poison flies. Arsenious oxide is used to poison rats and as a finx for glass, also in calico printing and for making pig Mydrosulphuric acid ( $\mathrm{H}_{2} \mathrm{~S}$ ) givee a yellow pre cipitata, Ass $S_{3}$, from a solution of an arseaite in lydrochloric acid.

So called hecsuse the ancieats, findiag that, in the dead bodies which they examined, the arteries were empty of blood, took up the very erroneous notion that they were designed for the circulation of sir through the system. Thus Cicero says, "Spiritus ex pulmone in cor recipitur et per arterias distribuitur, sanguis per venas." (Cicero, De Nat. Deorum, 1i. 55, 138.) This error was not ahaken by Herophilus. I One of the vessels designed to convey the blood from the heart. The arteries are long cylindrical tubes, with three coats, an external tunic commonly caliced the cellular coat, a middle or fibrous tunic or coat, and an epithelial tunic. The coating of the arteries is very elastic. The largest arteries which lsave the heart are the aorta and the pulmonary artery; both apring from the base of the heart in front. They branch and anastomose to a large extent. The contractility of the arteries forces the blood to the extremities from the heart, the vaives of which prevent its return. "The prominent differeace between blood drawn from the arteries and that from the veins is to be found in the bright scarlet colour of the former and the dark red, almost black, of the latter." Artesian well. A well of a type copied from those in use in Artoiz, though it is asid that similar ones previonsly existed in Italy, Egypt, China, and probably elsewhere. If at any place the strata bend into a trough or tmpermesble beds are separated by one or more strata which water can penetrate, then more strata which water can penetrate, then the rain will percolate into the porous beds at any poiat where an outcrop takes place, and, prevented from moving far up or down by the impermeable strata, will accumulate till It reaches the outcrops. If now a bore he made in the centre of the basin the water will be forced up by that standing at a higher level than itaelf, and may reach or even rise above the aurface of the ground. Artesian wells now exist very widely in the Uaited Btates and Earope.

 Arya (as substan.) =(1)a tribe or nation-th Aryas ; (2) in later Sanserit (as adj.) $=$ nohle of good family. India was called Arya-duarth $=$ the country of the Aryas. These Arya were invading Brahmans, Kshatriyas (warriors), and Vaisyas (merchants); whilst the aborigines of India were called in the Velas Dasyus. In later Sanscrit Arya sperially meant the third or merchant class, the most numerous of the three, whence it came to stand for the whole nation. It seems to nean one who plouglis or tills, and to be connected with the Latin word aro $=$ to plough, to till. It was opposed to Tura, in Sanscrit meaning (1) as adj. = swift; (2) as substan. = a nomad. [Turanian.] In Zend airya (adj.) means venerable, and (substan.) the Persian people. (The Persians and tha Indian Aryans were originally the same nation.) Persia was called by Hellenicus, who wrota before Herodotus, Aria. Herodotus says that the Medes called themselves Arii. in the cuneiform inserip-tions Darius denominates himself Ariya Many other words, ancient and modern, appear to contain the tern, as Iran (Persia); Ar menis; Aria, in Thrace; the Arit, in Germany; and even our own Erin and Ireland (See Max Muller on the Science of Language times been written Arian; but Aryan is more tines been writen hrian; hut Aryan is more correct, besides having the great sdvantage of discriminating the term from Arian, pertaining discriminating the term from Arian, pertaining in discussions regarding the dectrine of the Trinity.]
A. As adjective:
I. Philol. & Ethnol.: Belonging to the grest family of human languages described below.

Aryan family of languages: A great family or languages, sometines, though rarely, and not quite accurately, called Japhetic ; more frequently designated as the Inde-European or Indo-Germsnic family of tongues. They lisve reached a higher development than those of the second great family, the " Semitic," better d scribed as the Syro-Arabian family, and are far in advance of the next one-that comprising the Turaniau tongues. [Lanouades.] Like the Syro-Arabian forms of speech, they are inflectional [Inflectional]; while those of Turanian origiu are only agglutinate. [A0cioctinate.] Max Müler separates the Aryan family of languages primarily into a Southern and a Northern division. The former is subdivided into two classes-(1) the Indic, and (2) the Iranic ; and the latter into six-(1) the Celtic (2) the Italic, (3) the Illyric, (4) the Hellenic. (5) the Windic, and (6) the Teutonic. [See these words.] (Max Muller: Science of Language, ve ii., 187T, p. 411.) It is often said that Sanscrit sloken by the old Brahmans, is the root of all these classes of tongues. It is more correct to consider it as the flrst branch, and assume the existence of a root not now accessible to dircet investigation. As an illustration of the affinity among the Aryan tongues, take the common word doughter. It is in Sw. doter Dan. datter; Dut. dochter; Ger, tochter; O. H. Ger. tohtar; Goth. douhtar; Lith. duktere; Gr. $\theta$ vүáтnp (thugatēr); Armenian dustr; Sanse duhitri; the last-named word signifying primarily, "milkmaid," that being the func tion, in the early Brahnan or Aryan honse hold, which the daughter discharged. No only are the roots of very many words akin thronghout the several Aryan tongues, but (a more important fact) so also are the inflections. Thus the first yerson aingular of a well-known verb is in Lat. do; Gr. סidwul (didōmi); Lith dumi; Old Slav damy; Zend dadhami; Sanse dadami; and the third person sing. present indic. of the substantive verb is in Eng. is, Goth. ist, Lat. est, Gr. ©́ $\sigma \sigma_{i}^{(e s t i), ~ S a u s c . ~ a s t i . ~}$
there exista in India a gort of rivalry between the Aryan languages, or rather, between the three principal ones H 1 nd considering itself superiur to the others. Compar. Gram. Aryan Lang. of India, vol. I. (1872)
II. Ethnology

1. Gen.: Pertaining to the old race sleaking the primeval Aryan tongue [A.], or any of the numerous forms of apeech which have sprung from it. The ancestors of most modern Europeans lived together as one people, speaking the primeval Aryan tongue, in Central Asia, and apparently near the Panir steppe. Their aepration took place at so remote a period that, while they seem to have known gold silver, and colper, they were unacquainted with iron, the name of which is different in all the leading Aryan tongues. (Max Muitter, Scipnce of Language, vol. ii., 1871, p. 258.)
2. Spec:: The Aryan race which invaded India at a periou of remote antiquity, possihly 1700 B.C., and atill remains the dominaut findoo race there.

I. Literally:
4. Hist.: A military and religioas order which constituted an offshoot from the is maili branch of the great Shiah aect of Mohammedans. It was founded in A.D. 1090 by Hassau ben Sabah, at the hill fort of Alamoot, in Persia. A section of them afterwarda removed Irom Persla to Mount Lebanon, where they came in contact with tha crusaders, and throngh them acquired infanous aotoriety in Europe. By the rules of their founder, they were bound implicitly to carry out the cormmands of their chief (popularly known iu the West as the "Old Man of the Mountain "), even to the extent of mardering aay king or inferior person in Europe, Asia, or snywhere, with whom he might have a quarrel. Several proud potentates are said to have paid him black mail for aafety'a sake; but thes gallant Knights Templars had more of a kiogly apirit, and defied his power. The Mongols made a general massacre of the Persian branch of the order in 1256 , and Sultan Bibars all but rooted out the Syrian offshoot in 1270, hut traces of out the syrian alls to exist iu both countries, especially at Kalat el Masryad, in Persia, Despite their origia, the Assassins were not pure Shiahs io faith; their religion was a mixture of Magianism, Judaism, Christianity, and Mohammedism. There was a certaio resemblance between their tenets and those of the Druses in Monnt Lebanon.

I. The determination what percentage of a metal, especially of a preciona one, ia in any particular ore or alloy. An ardinary or a simple assay is designed to ascertain how much a compound of gold or ailver variea from the prescribed standard, whilst a parting assay is deaigned to separate tbe two metala from each other in the specimen examined, that the proportion in the bullion of which it is a fair portion in the bullion of Which it is a fair aample may be ascertained. In a gol parting assoy, the amonat of ailver in the gold ia ascertained; and in a bilver parting assay, the amonnt of gold in the ailver. [Assayina, Touch.] The aualysis, or assay, of an slloy of gold and copper is usually made by cupellation with lead. The weight of the hutton remaining on the cupel gives directly the amount of gold in the alloy after certalin corrections similar to those required in the casc of silver.  a seal, . 8 contract or lease; from Lat. assideo $=$ to sit near.] [Assident.]Commerce & Histary: A contract or convention between the King of Spain and other powers for furnishing slaves for the Spanish dominions in Americs. The contract of the Assiento was made on Maroh 26 th, 1713 .
Assiento Company: Any company entrusted with the fonction of folfilling the Assiento contract. The first ons which agreed to undertake the degrading task was the French Guinea Company. In July, 1713, the Treaty of Utrecht handed it over to Great Britaln and for twenty-six years the South Sea Company dld something towards readering the odious service required. But the breaking out of war in 1739 placed the $\Delta$ ssiento coutract in sheyance. It was never revived, and uitimately Britain becams the mortal foe, first of the slave-trade, sad then of slavery itself.

ags-si-gnat' (gnat as nyăt), s. [Fr.] An annuity founded on the secnrity of tands. Specialiy, French Republtean paper money. When the revolntionary Frenth Assembly of 1790 took the decisive step of disendowing the church, and appropriating all ecclesiastica property to the state, the prodigious quantity of church lands, amounting to about one-third of the soil of France, thrown npon ita hands conld not be disprosed of all at once. The labour of selling it was therefors devolved on each commune or parish, which was required to pay the proceeds, when reslised, into the state treasnry. Meamwhile the government being without adequate revsmue, issued jsper money on ths security of the funds to be paid it by the communes. The bonds issued for the purposs were called assignats. Ulit niately over-issue of these paper notes greatly depreciated their value, so that in the year 1795, 3,000 instead of abourt twenty-four of them were given in change for a lonis-d'or. The word Association, though not so common as society, is still in genersl use in the sense detailed under A., IlI. 1. A well. known assoclation in Britain is fully and for mally designated "The British Associstion for the Advancement of Science," but it is generally called simply "The British Association." At its first meeting, that held in York on the 27 th of September, 1831, the Rev. Willism Vernon Harconrt thas defined its aims :-
"I propose then. gentlemen, in the frst place, that ment of sclence, having for its objecta, to give tronger impulse, and nore systemstic in otive give a acientific inquiry, to obtalu a greater degree of oatiouna attention to the objecta of science, and a removal o: promote the intercourse of the coutivators of science

The British Association has since greatly developed, having now (1879) sbout 4,000 members. It is divided into the following sec tions:-Section A. Mathematics and Physics B. Chemistry and Mineralogy ; C. Geology D. Biology; E. Geography and Ethnology F. Statistics; G. Mechanical Science. These sections are again divided into what till 1865 were called sub-sections, but hsve since been termed dspartments. (Brit. Assoc. Rep., 187 p. xxxvi.) The associstion meets, on invita tion being sent to it, in any of the larger towns or cities (London excepted) which can givg it accommodstion, doing ita best at esch place to communicate sn impulse towards the cultivation of science which may continus to operata after it has gone.

The sum for which the individusl insured becones responwible is called the premium. If givenallat once it is called a single premium; if at the commencement of each year, on annual premium.

While the time of a single person's denth is not ascertainable beforehand by man, the percentage of deaths out of 10,000 , or 100,000 , or a million, is wonderfully fixed, the variations beconing less as the number from which the percentage is calculated grows greater. sjecisl purpose of exploring the zodise with specisl purpose of exploring the zodise with the hope of discovering the supposed planet, but ita efforts were not crowned with success. On the first day of the nineteenth ceatury (Jsn. $1,180 \mathrm{I}$ ) s planetary body, afterwards called Ceres, was found by Piszzi (who did not helong to the society) in the part of the solar system theoretically indicated; it wss, however, far more diminutive in aize than had been expected. Within the next six year three more asteroids (PBllas, Jnno, and Veeta) were found in proximity to Ceres, snd the suspicion arose that s goodly sized planet hasd picion arose that a goodly sized planet had

Sir of "Frevster boldy Effirms this in his edition Herschel at one time ridiculed the ides. It was reasoned that if auch s catastrophe had taken plsce, many more than four fragments of the ghsttered planet would probebiy exist but the eesrch having been considerod futile, it was sbandoned in 1816 . It was subse quently resumed by M. Heacke, sad from 1845 to July, 1879, no fewer thas 200 have been met with. All are of minute eize, snd some sngulsr in plsce of spherical. According to Mr. Daniel Kirkwood, sn American astroMr. Dasiel Kirkwood, sn American astronomer, they would collectivel
The term asteroid, applied to these small bodies, is now becoming obsolete, the appellation minor planets taking its place. Planetoids is adother nsme. They are sometinues also called extra-sodiacal planets, from their orbits stretching outside the zodiac, which Is not the case with those of the normsi type. Anthorities differ respecting some minute pointa in the list of asteroids. [PLaNET, SOLAR-svetzm.]
Among those who have been particularly successful in the search for asterolde may b nsmed the astronomers: Hind, who discovered ten in the years 1847-54; De Gasperie, whoee discoveries reached nine, between 1849 and 1865; Goldschmidt, whose reeesrches between 1852 and 1861 added fifteen to the liet; and Luther, who discovered nineteen, in the yesre 1852-1873. Still more successful in their planetary researches have been Petere, of Hamiltod College, United Statee, who, aince 1861, has discovered forty eight; snd Palisa, of Vienna whose first find was in 1872, and whose total discoveries number more than seventy, five of which were found in a single week. The number annually discovered has varied from number annually discovered has varied from four or five to seventeen, which number was found in 1875 , while during the last twenty years 236 asteroids have been added to the preceding list. In fact, as the number of observers fncreased, the power of telicscopes developed, and the chartiog of the stars became more full and exact, it grew more and more difficult for an laterloper in the celestial spaces to eacane detection, while those of a minuteness that would bave made them quite imper ceptible in former years, ylelded the secret of their existence to the increasingly powerful telescopes that were directed towards them, nad the drier and clearer atmospheres io which nad the drier and clearer atmospheres
What we have bo far baid is, however, in a measure ancient history as regards the search for asteroids. It applies only to the years preceding 1892. In that and the subsequent years the search for these pianetary bodies has been conducted on a dew method, of a far more effective character, and new examples are being added to the planetary chart with a remarkable rapidity; an annoying one, indeed, remarkable rapidity; an annoying one, indeed, to astronomers, who are beglinning to find the crowd of small bodies thus gliding through the crowd of small bodies thus gliding throngl the starry spaces, and needing to be recognised and oamed, something of a burden. Tbe naming of them, i iodeed, has been no small task. The larger planeta having been named task. The larger planeta having been named after the princpan mong them for a single, with a the first four and largest of the asteroids were named sfter the remaining godesses of high estate. When, later, smaller asteroids began to be added in rapid numbers to the list, they were given the names of the minor goddesseg, were given the names of the minor goudesses, the nymphs and other defic beings, the Scanthe nymphs and other deific beings, the Scandioavian mythology supplying a few names to dioavian mythology aupplying a few names to the list. At a later date the "embarrasement of list. At a later date the "embarrassment taken from other sources than mythology, and the women of history, literature and legend were drawn uyon, such titles as Virginia, Sappho, Antiope, Hecuba, Cassandra, Hermione, and varions others from ancient times being applied, whije more modern times furnished the titles of Bruahilda, Hilds, Bertha, Eva, Ophelia, Maria, sud others of the same general character. More recently the method of numberiog has been adopted, the available names threateulng to become exhausted. This, however, is a matter of curious interent only; the new method by which asteroids are discovered is of much more moment, and calle for a brie deacription. The system employed is that of photography, a method which is being applled photography, s method which is being applled to the secreta of the hes vens generally, with a to the secreta of the hes vens generally, with a variety of unexpected and important resulta. variety of unexpected and important resuita, Previous to 1892 the searcher sfter asterolds wa Previous to 1892 the searcher sfter asterolds was obliged to prosecute his sespch hy a flow and lsboriaus process. Ile was first obliged to make a careful snd sccurate chsrt of all the stare visible within certsin fixed localitieg of the heavens, inserting in his map, in their correct placee, all the stars visible io the field of his telescope. This done, he gave himself to a careful re-exsminstion of those spsces, as they come one by one opposite the sun, and took their place in the midnight skies, observing them minutely, and watching to see if any star appeared not siready on his chart. If such a atar were seen it might possibly be a variable atar, but was fer more likely to be a planet. To settle thls question s few hours' observation alone was needed. If as star, it would remsin fired in relative place; if a planet, it wonld move, olightly changing it place smong the atare. Once shown to have a motion of its own, a few days observation would serve to determine its orbit, sad decide whether it was a new planetoid or a re-discovery of one of the older ones, since some of the listter hsve escaped from observstion and bave been "adrift" for msny years, the original determinstion of the elementa of their orbita not having been sccurate.

This tedious process of star-charting, and slow compsrison, star by star, of chart and aky, are no loager necessery. The photographic camera doee the work far more aurely and satisfactorily, and sleo servee to traco asteroids of s size below the level of felescopic reach. At present the asteroid hunter does his work with s apecislly constructed lene of his work with ss apecisily constructed lens of from sir to eight laches in dismeter, mounted from air to eight aches in dismeter, mounted like an equatorial telescope, and so adjusted and stranged that it can be made to follow, hour after hour, the diurnal motion of the stars. By this instrument a photogreph can be taken of a field of the heavens several huadred times as great in srea as can bo commanded by the field of view of an ordinary telescope. Seversl hours are needed for the process, the light of the stars being so faint that it takes hours to impress itself upon the sensitive film. But this exposure for hours is necessary for the discovery of an asteroid, necessary for the discovery of an asteroid, since it gives time for the motion of the latter to declare itself. If sll goes well, each of the thousands of stars in the field of the jastruthoussads of stars in the field of the instrument will be impressed upon the photographic ment will be impressed upon the photographic planet among them it will be indicated by a streak or line, due to its movement, and the length and direction of the line will indicate how the body is moving. In some instadees wo or three such asteroids have been detected on a single plate. This new nethod of research has proved highly effective. In 1893 no less than forty such discoveries were made. Some of these had been seen before, and some are doubtful, but twenty-one of them have been doubtful, but twenty-one of them have been added definitely to our system, sud received their appropriate numbers. It is to be feared that the photographic plate may eventually add several thousands to the number now known, and that they may come so fast and numerously se to be unwelcome additions to our family of planeta.
The largest of the asteroids is believed to be not over 450 miles in diameter. The smallestto be hereafter discovered-may be but a very few miles. The whole body of them cannot contain more than one-fourth the mass of the earth. Their orbita differ greatly; bome of them being of great eccentricity and inclination to the ecliptic, others of small, while their distances from the sun vary similarly, 80 that their orbits are intricately interlaced and, if viewed perpendicularly, would form a kind of net-work. of those traced up to 1891, Meduss (No. 149) has the ehortest period of revolution 1137.69 days; and Hilda (No. 153) the longest 2869,92 dsys. The latter is nearly twice as far from the sun as the former. Polyhymuia's orbit has the greatest eccentricity, amoudting to 0.33998 ; Lomia's the Jeast, 0.2176 . The nearest spproach to the sun is made by l'hocea, ita perihelion distance being 1.787 the earth' mean distance. Freis recedes the farthest, its aphelion distance heing 4.002. Msssalia's orbit makes the smallest angle with the ecliptic of any planet known, it being only $41^{\prime} 7^{\prime \prime}$; whlle the inclination of the orbit of Pallas reacheo the high sagle of $34^{\circ} 42^{\prime} 41^{\prime \prime}$.

1. Originally: The word astrology, as yet uoepecializad, included both the true scieace of astronomy and the paeudo ecience defined undar No. 2. [See etymology.]
2. Now: The word hsving become special ized, olgaifes the pseudo aciance which pre tands to foretell future eventa by studying the position of the stars, and ascertaialing thei alleged infiaence upon human destiny. Na tural Astrology professes to predict changes in the westher from studying the stars [AstroMETEOROLOAY), and Judicial or Judiciary Astrology to foretell eventa bearing on the destiny of individual human beings or the race of mankind generally.

I In the infsncy of the world, when the atars were assumed to be, as they seemed, sparkles of light, whose diminutiveness markediy contrasted with the hugeness of the earth, it was a perfectly legitimata conjecture or hypothesis thst ooe main function which the shining specks served in the economy of nsture might be to influeace human dastiaies, Heace the Chinese, the Egyptians, the Chal dæans, the Romans, and most other sncien natioce, with the honorable exception of the Greeks, became implicit believers in astrology. It was pertly the cauae and partly the effect of the prevalent worship of the hesvenly of the pravalent worship," of the hesvenly ferred to by Isatah (xlvii, 13), were evidently ferred to by Isaiah (xivil. 13), were evidently astrologers: so siso wers what are called in astrologers: so siso wers what are called in the margin " viewors of the heavens" in but 20 ; ii. 2,27 ; iv. 7 ; v. 7 , ia s much vaguer one, meaning thoae who practise iacantations, without indicating what the character of these ocsatationa msy be. The later Jews, the Arsbs, with other Mohammedan rsces, and the Chriatians io mediæval Europe, were sil great cultivstors of astrology. The ordiaary method of procedure in the Middle ages was to divide a globe or a planisphere into twelve portions by circles ruaning from pole to pole, ike those which now mark meridians of longiunds. Each of the tweive spacea or intervals between these circles was called $s$ "house" of heaven. The ano, the moon, and the stars all pass ouce io twenty-four hours through the portion of the heavena represented by the twelve "housea;" nowhere, however, except st the equator, are the same stars uoiformly together in the aame houae. Every house has one of the heavenly bodiea ruliag over it as ita lord. The houres aymbolize different advantages or disadventages. The first ia the honae of life; the aecond, of riches; the third, of brethrea; the fourth, of pareats; the fifth, of childrea ; the sixth, of health ; the seventh, of marriags; the eighth, of desth ; the aioth, of marriags; the eighth, of desth; the aiath, of religion; the tenth, of dignities; the eleventh, of frieuds; and the twelfth of eleventh, of frieuds; and the twelfth of enemies. The houses vary ti strength, the enemies. The houses vary in strength, the first one, that containing the part of tha first one, that containing the part of the hesvens about to rise being the most powerhesveos about to rise, being the most powerful of ali: it is called the ascendant [AscenDANT]; whilat the point of the ecliptic just rising is termed the horoscope. The important matter was to ascertain what house and star was in the ascendant st the moment of a persoa's birth, from which it was deemed possible to augur his fortune. It followed that all people born ja the same part of the worid at the same time ought to have had the same future, so allegation which experience decisively contradicted. Even apart from this, astrological predictions of all kinds had $s$ fatal tendency to pass sway without being fulfilled; snd when, finally, it was discovered that the tioy-looking atars wers suns like thst irrsdisting our heavens, sud the earth not the centre of the universe, but only a planet revolving round snother body, snd itself much exceeded in aize by several of its compeers, every acientiflc mind ia Europe felt itaelf uaable any loager to believe in astrology; which has been io an increasingly lsnguishing state since the middle of the seventeenth century. It still flourishea in Asia and Africa Thus when a Brshman boy comes into the world means are at oace takan to conatruct his "horoacops," indicating what his future deatioy Io to be. But io America, st this advanced period of the nineteenth century no one can profess to believe in aatrology withoat exciting the gravest doubt regarding his intellect, hia knowledge, or his good faith. It is legal to publish a work diaflgured with astrological vatictnations; but the momen epts payment for telling, by the help of the atars, the "fortane" of an individual he or she becomes liuhla to arrest, Io Eagland as a "rogue aod a ragabond." No belief, exteaaively hald and loog pravalent, ever pasae $s w a y$ without leaving traces in lsoguage, sad ascendant, ascendency, dinaster, disastrous, evil starred, influence, mercurial, jovial, saturnine, &c. ara all astrological terma.

2. Subsequently: As study of the heavena sdvsaced, the more gifted minds discovered the fallscy of the old notion that the stars influenced human destinies, whilst the lesa taleated firmly sdhered to the popular deluaion on the aubject. It conscquently became needful to distinguish the two classes of men. The word astronomer was therefore reserved for any really gcientific student of the stars, whilst the term astrologer was sbandoned to the credulous, if aot even iasincere, star-gazer. Convenience dictated thia arraogement : if otymology were followed, an astrologer would be regarded as the equal, if not the superio of an aatronomer. [Astrologer.]

2. Subseruently and nows: The sublime science which treats of the distancea, magni science which mases, composition, motions, and all that is discoversble regarding the heavenly hodtes, meaning the sun, the earth, the noon, the planets, the fixed stars, the comets, the meteorites, the nebule, and all other materia bodies really or spparently moving in infintte space. It to founded on carefal and oftrepeated observations, made. chiefiy with elaborstely-constructed instruments [AsTRONomical Instruments]; these observations being next made the basis of reasoning founded, wherever it is practicsble, as it generally is, on mathemsticst demonetration Astronomy may be variously divided. A eimple distinction is sometimea mado into geogry, which treata of the earth, and usanography, the subject of which is the " heavens." Sometimea the branch of ecience which describes the celestial bodies as they are is called Descriptive Astronomy. When the apecific subject treated is the "fixed stars, it becomes Sidereal Astronomy. The sciences now mentioned have sought rsther to record than to explain phenomens; but what is called Physical Astronomy proposes to itsel the high aim of accounting for the facta ob oerved. Ita chisf ally in this arduous task is mathemstics, with which every astronomer worthy of the nsme requires to be very familisr
II The vanlt of heaveri being visible in all tts glory alternately by day snd night in every portion of the world, absolute ignorance regarding celestial phenomena canoot have existed in any place or at any time. The peopie beloaging to some nationa were, however, more observant in this respect than others, and clsims to early proficieacy in astro nomy, in some cases lesding to vehemen controversy, have been preferred in favour of the Chinese, the Chaldæans, the Egyptians and the Hindoos. In these snd other coun triea, in early times, the stars were not so much etadied as worshipped, thers being atrong temptation, even in the most pious miads, to this form of religions error (Joh xxxi. 26-28) Hipparchus of Bithynia and Rhodes (?), who flouriahed from B.C. 160 to 125 , catalogued the stars visible above the horizon, aotiag down 1,080. Among his numerons discoveries may be reckoned the precession of the equinoxes trigonometry, sad apparently the stereogra phic projection of the sphere. The next very grest name was that of Ptolemy, the geo grapher and astronomer of Alexandria, A.D $130-150$, who discovered the luaar evection refrsction, de. [Evection, Refraction.] He was also the suthor of the Ptolemaic system with its primum mobile, its eccentrics, and its epicycles.

Oh, how unllke the complex works of man :"
The Arabs translated a work of Ptolemy's called Méyogty (Megisté) into their own lan guage, and rrefixing to its name their article $a_{l}=$ the, transformed it into Almagest. The Christians during the "dark ages" deriving their knowledge of astrononiy from the Arsbs rather than from s atudy of the heavens, received from their instructors the Ptolemaic system and the Almagest, which did not lose credit in Western Europe till the seventeenth century. [Almagest, Ptolemaic.] in 1472 or 14 ust before bis desthernicus, who in 1543 just before his on the Revolutions of the Heavenly Bodies, composed more than thirteen years before It propounded the Copernican system [Copernicas'], which, modified and im proved, is now received as cstablished truth being supported by an amount of evidence of which Copernicus had no conception. The next very grest name is that of Tycho Brahé a Dane by birth, but of Swedish ancestry He was born on the 14th of December, 1546 . and died in 1601. Though not sccepting the Copernican system, but hotding viows partly Ptoleny [Tvchosic] his extensive and sccurst Ptolemy [TvCHONic], his extensive and sccurst observetions gave a great inipulse to astrooomy, snd prepared the way for further dis coveries, in sddition to those which he had himself made. Two grest names now conie together upon the sceae, those of Kepler and of Galileo. The former was s pupil of Tycho.
He will for ever ve remembered for the discovery of the three lawa which bear hia name the first snd second made known in 1609, and the third io 1618. [KEPLER's LAWs.] About 1581, Galileo had discovered the isochronism of the pendulum [Pendulum] having constructed a telescope, he discovered in 1610 the satellites of Jupiter, the phases of venus, the In 1642, the year in which Gslileo died, Sir

Isaac Newton was born, and in 1687 he published his fmmortal Principia, in which the law of gravitation was announced, thus eanstituting an epoch in tho history of science Which probe

Natore and Natureco laws lay hld in wecht;
The year that Newton died ( 1727 ) was the one in which the discovery was made by Bradiey of the aberration of lipht, which irreframally proved the motion of the earth, and gave the death-blow to the Ptolemaic and Tychonie systeus, both of which were founded on the hypothesis that it was etationary. As we pproach modern times the discoveries become from most be found to mention the Ferschel room mnst be found to mention the Rerschel famiiy - the first of the name, Sir William farniiy-the first of the name, Sir William Herschel, who was born m 1738, and died in 1 s 22 , having, among other great discovefies, sdded nine new members of the solar system, one of them, the planet Uranus, to the eightern previously known. The work on astronomy often quoted in these pages was penned by his son, Sir John Herschel, also a great discoverer; and the third generstion of the family are now at work. Many discoveries will be found recorded under other articles. Asteroid, Comet, Conetellation, Gravitation, Planet, Solar Svstem, Star, &c.]

The creed which the framers of the English Liturgy, with the framers of the Engitical acumen, designate as "this Confesaion of our Christian Faith commonly called the Creed of Saint Athanasius," thus avniding any expression of belief as to its real suthorship. Though correctly expressing the doctrine of that Christian father, it seems not to have been penned till after hia time. Dr. Waterland ascribed it to Hilary, Bishop of Arles from A. D. 430 to 449 . It was about the begimning of the eighth century that it commented to be read in liturgic worship. The English Prayer-book enjoina that it be used in the churches on the principal feativals, when it is to take the place of the Apostlea Creed, aud to be sung or said "by the minister and people standing." The Greek Church has nowified the article relating to the "Procession " of the Holy Ghost.

[PYMaHonism, Sceptics, Soparsts.] Socrates was put to death for asserting the auperiority of the Divine Wisdom ( $\phi$ poimats) to the other gode, as the ruler and diaposer of the universe, thus contradicting to Zens, In Latin times atheism still continued to be a negation, with no pretension to rank as a system. Voltaire syeaks of it as having destroyed the republic, snd saye that it was factious in the time of Sulle and of Cæsar, and slavish under Anguatus and Tiberius. It was closely akin to that cnltured uobelief which extensively prevailed at. the Roman Caria during the early part of the Renascence. Macaulay (Ranke's History of the Popes) is very severe on the "men who, with the Latinity of the Augostan age, scquired its athelstical and scoffing spirit." The atheism of the eighteenth century was s protest against the pergecution of fanaticiam; and, like its predecessore, pnt forward little or nothing to replace the syatem it attempted to destroy. The athelsm of the present century may be taken to include every philosophic aystem which rejects the notion of a personal Creator: In this sense it ranks as a genus, of whlch Atonilsm, Pantheism, Positivism, \&c., are apecies. atmospheric railway. A railway in which the propulsive force designed to mave the carriages along is that of the atmosphere. The notion of auch a method of loconotion seema firat to have auggested itself, in the latter part of the seventeenth century, to the French physician, Papin, whose nanie is for ever associated with the celebrated digester. [Dioester.] In 1810 Mr. Medhurst published a work entitlad A New Method of conveying Letters and Gonds by Air. His proposal was to construct a cloged tunnel, in which the carriages - the last of them provided with a piston fitting the tunnel-ahould be propelled by air forced in behind thein. Vallance, of Brighton, in 1825, recommended as an improvement on this plan the exhauation of the air in front. About 1835 Mr. Henry Pinkus, an American gentleman residing in England, patented a acheme for placing the carriages in the open air, but connecting them below with a small tunnel, having a narrow slit above, with ingeniously-constructed apparatus to render the tumel temporarily air-tight notwithstanding the slit. Not much was done to carry out the patent; and Pinkus's scheme of what he called a Pnenmatic Railway was considered as having failed, when, in 1840 , Messrs. Clegg and Damuda binught forward a aonewhat similar project under the nane of the "Atmospheric Railway." Ao experinental fragment of line laid down near Wornwood Scrubs, on the Great Western line, was successful, as was one designed for actual use from Kingstown to Dalkey, in Ireland, another between London and Croydon, and a third io South Devon; all, however, have been since abaudoned. For nassengers at least, and to a great extent even for the transmission of letters, the railways of the ordinary type, on which steam is the impeling force, have triumphantly held their owo against the innovation of the Atmospheric or Pneumatic Railwty, and all that now remaina of the latter method of propulsion are the pneumatic dispatch tubes, used in Landon, and recently introduced in some American cities, for transmitting mail and parcels to short distances. ## atotó, adv. [ATwo.] (Scotch.)

a'tǒ̆k, s. [South American name.]
Zool.: A varlety of the Mephitis Americana found at Quito, whence Humboldt called it Gulo Quitensis. It is sometimes termed the Zorra.
a'tǒll, s. & a. [A Maldive word Anglicised. In Fr. atollon.]
A. As substantive: The name applied by geologists and others to any one of the lagoon islands or annular coral reefs found in the Pacific and the Indian Oceans, the Red Sea, and some other parts of the tropica. An atoll is a ring of coral rock, oval rather than circular in form. One reaches eighty-eight miles in its longer, by tweaty in its shorter, diameter; but in gensral they are of much more limited but in gensral they are of much nore on the ton of the corack, which rises but slightly sbove the ses-level, is Which rises but slighty sove the ses-level, is vegetation of some luxuriance-the cocoa-nut being the most conspicuous plat. On the convex circumference of the ring is a beach of white sand, exterior to which is a line of breakers, and a few feet beyoud them the unfathomable ocean. The ring of land, which is less than half a mile across, encircles s lagoon of comparatively still water, which, from reflection, is of a bright but pale-green colour. In the view of Mr. Darwin, now almost universally adopted, there was oace an island, possibly even containing high land, in the place now occupied by the lagoon. It was the place now oceupied by the lagoon. It was surrounded by a "Eringing reef" of living coral close to the shore. As, front geological causes, it slowly subsided into the deep and this-appeared, the corai snimals built uly to the surface of the water, and formed the ring of rock constituting the modern island. In the larger atolls there are generally two or three breaks in the ring, affording ship-channels into the lagoon; these mark the apots where fresh water, discharged from the old aubsiding land into the spa, prevented the coral animals, which are marine, from locating themselves or building. [Coral.]

Hence I bave invariably ured in this volume the terin a atoll' Which is the name given to these circular groups or coral inlets iy their inhabitants in the Darwin: Coral Reefs (1842). D 2

II. Technically:

I. Mental Phil.: A particle of matter so infinitely small that it cannot agrain be subdivided; the jdea of a divided etom-tbat is, of a division of that which cannot be dividedbeiag self-contradictory. It is s mental conception simply; for the senses cannot take ception simply; for the senses cognizance of snything bo minute.
2. Nat. Phil.: One of the exceedingly minute ultimate particles of matter, aggregates of an immense number of which, held in their place by molecular forces, constitute all material bodies.
3. Chem.: The emallest particle into which an element can be divided. An stom cannot exist in a separate state, but unites with one or nore stoms to form a molecule. The atoms of differeat elements have definite relative weights fixed sud invarisble for each, the weight of an atom of hydrogen being regarded as unity. [Elemetrr.]

atomic heat.

Chem.: A term introduced by M. Regnault. The atomic heat of the elements in a solid state ls nearly a constant quantity, the mean valute being 6.4. This number is obtained by multiplying the specific heat of an element by its atomic weight. The atomic heat of an element represents the quantity of heat which element represents the quantity of heat which must be imparted to or removed from atomic must be imparted to or removed from atomic proportions of the several elements, in order (See Watts' Dict. Chem.)

atomio or atomical philosonhy.

Mental and Nat. Phil. The Doctrine of Atoms: A doctrine or hypothesia originally broached hy Leucippus, sfterwards developed by Democritus, and which underwent further modifications at the hands of Epicurus. It represented atoms as possessed of gravity and motion, and attributed to their union the formation of all things. Demoeritua is reported to have said that they come together in different order and position like the letters, which, though they are few, yct by being placed in conjunction in different ways produce innumerable words.

atomic theory.

N"ct. Phil. \& Chem.: A theory first propounded by John Dalton in his New System of Chemical Philosophy, publisbed in 1807. He tated that the atoms of each element were incapable of being subdivided, snd esch had a definite relative weight, compared with that of hydrogen as 1 ; that the composition of a definite chemical compound is constant; that if two elements, $A$ and $B$, are capsble of uniting with each other in several jroportions, the quantities of B which unite with a given quantity of $A$ usually bear a simple relation to one another. If an element $A$ unites with certain other elements $B, C, D$, then the quantitiea $\mathrm{B}, \mathrm{C}, \mathrm{D}$, which combine with A , or simple analtiples of them, represent the proportions in which they can unite among themportions in which they can unite anong themgelves. Dalton supposed that one element replaced another atom for atom, but it has since been found that one atom of an element can replsce ons or more atome of enother element, sccording to. their respective stomi. cities. [ATomictrv.]

atomic volume.

Chem.: A term introduced by Graham in lieu of the phrase "apecific volume", used by Dr. Kopp. (Graham's Chemistry.) It aignifies the volums or measure of an equivalent or atomic proportion in differeat aubstaaces. It is obtained by dividing the molecular weight of \& compound by its specific gravity. The speciffc gravity of a compound gas or vapour referred to hydrogen as unity is equal to half ita atomic welglit; therefore the atomic volumes of compound gases or vapours referred to hydrogen as uaity are, with few ex ceptions, equal to 2. The densities of isomorphoua solid compounds are proportional to equal stomic or specific volumes. The differences of specifio or atomic volums of organic liquids is oftea proportional to ths differences between the correspondiag chemical formulw. Thus liquids whose formulse differ by $n \mathrm{CH}_{2}$ differ in specific or atomic volume by $n$ times 22. (See Watts' Dict. Chem.)
atomic weight. (Symbol and ahbrevis. tion, At. Wt.) Chem.: The weight of an atom of an element compared with the weight of en atom of $H$, which is regarded as unity. Thus the atomic weight of oxygen is 16 ; that is, sn atom of 0 is sixteen times as heavy as an stom of H. The sum of the atomic weighta of a chemical compound is called its molecular weight, and, with a few exceptions, the epecific gravities gaseous atate are equal to half their molecular weights. The specific heats of many of the elements are nearly proportional to tbeir atomie weights. (For atomic weights, see Element.)
a-tŏm'-cal-1 $\mathbf{1}$, adv. [Eng. atomic; -ally.] After the manner of those holding the atomic philosophy:

a-tom'-i-çinm, s. [Eng. atomic; -ism.] The doctrine of atoms or of the stomical philosophy. (Cudworth.)
ăt-öm-iç'-i-ty̆, s. [Eng. atomic; -ity.]
Chem.: The combining capecity of an elemsat or radical. It is neeasured by the number of atoms of $H$ or other monatomic elements with which the element in question can directly combire, or can replace in a subatance. When an element does not unite with $H$ its atomicity may be measured by the number of atoma of Cl or some other monatomic element with which it can directly combine, since the atomicity of these elements is equal to that of atomicity of these elements is equal to that of H , and they may be substituted for it, atom H , and they may be substituted for it, atom for atom. The atomicity of an element cannot be estimated by the number of diatomic or polyatomic atoms that it can take up, as this number is indefinite. A diatomic elemeat like oxygen may attach itself to another eloment, or group of elements, ly one of its combining bonds, leaving the other free; and to this again another diatomic or polystomic element may be attached, and so on indellnitely. The atomicity of an element is also called its quantivalence.

II Drawing the distinction between inclinaion, attachment, and affection, Crabb shows thst inclination is the weakest of the thrce words. Inclinations, hes says, srise of themaelvea, attachments are formed; inclination, moreover, has respect chiefly to thinga, attachment to elther persona or thinga, and affection to persons only. "Attachment, ss it regards persons, is not ao powerful or solid as affection. Children are attached to those who will minister to their gratifications; they have an affection for their nearest and dearest relatives. Attachment is sometimes a tender sentiment between persons of different sexes; affection is an affair of the heart withont diatinction of aex. The passing attachments of young people are aeldom entitied to aerious notice although sometimes they may ripen by long intercourse into a landable and ateady affection. Nothing is so delightful as to see affection among brothers and sisters."

* B, Law: One who managed suy legal matters for another in a common law conrt in this differing from a solicitor who practised in a court of equity. He correaponded to the procurator or proctor of the civilians and canonists. The attorneys were formed into a regular body, to which no new inembers wer admitted, except those who had conformed to the regulations laid down in the Act 6 and 7 Vict., c. 73. By the Judicature Act of 1873 , §87, what were previously called attorneys are now denominated solicitors of the Supreme Court. In the United Sitateb, the term at torney-at-law is used for one who acts in the interest of another in matters of law, and takes the place of the several Engligh and Scotch terms of advocate, attorDey, barrister counsellor-at-law, la wyer, proctor and solicitor. All thees terms, except barrister, are used to a greater or less extent in this country, bat at aoted above, attoroey-nt-law is the general term in ybe.
Letter or Power of Attorney: A legal document by which a person appoints another to act for him in some particular matter, as to claim or receive a dept due to him. One who acts in consequeace of being named in auch a document is called a private attorney, and need not be a lawyer at all.

1. Formerly: The angite of Werner was the oame as what has been called volcanic achist and volcanite.
2. Now: Dana applies the name augite to the greenish or hrownish-black snd black kinda of sluminous pyroxene, found chiefly in ernptive, but sometimes also in metamorphic rocks. [Pynoxkne] When altered into hornblende it is called Tralite (q.v.). Augite was once suspected by many mineralogists to be essentially the same mineral as hornblende, differing ouly in this respect, that the former species reaulted from rapid and the latter from slow cooling. But Dana separates the two regarding hornblende as an aluminous variety of amphibole [Amphibole], sad not of pyroxene [Honnbiende.] Whatover its exact place in the ayatem, it 1 s 80 mach akin to pornblende that Ginstav Rose, fusing a mass of the latter mineral, found that on cooling it uniformly became augite. Both are found in modern and in ancient volcanic products. The green and dark kinds of eruptive rock have hornblende or angite predominant, whlle the reddish ones owe their colour to the abundance of felspar in their composition. In Britain augite occurs aeparately as a mineral in the trap rocks around Edinburgh and elsowhere.

3. Lit. Among the Romans: Omeos, apecially those drswa from the flight or other movemeats of birds, or less properly, from the occurreace of lightaing or thunder in particular psrts of the sky. These were supposed to be indications of the will of Hesven, and to reveal futurity. At first only the sugurs took the auspices [AUGURS], but after a time civil officers, discharging important functions, had the right of doiug 80. Two kinds of auspices, however, arose-a greater and a lesser; the former reaerved to dictators, consuls, cenaors, protors, or the commander-in-chief in war; protars, or the commander-in-chinelted war; the latter permitted to less exalted functionsries. In the long struggle which the tionsries. J the long struggle which the permision to share in political power, one chief argument used by ths opponents of change was, the impossibility that a plebeisu could take the ausjices; but when, in B.C. 307, the flinging open of the augural college to sll classes permitted him to try the experiment, it was found thst he did the work as effectively (not to say sa ineffectively) as any patrician whstever. 4．Mechanics：
The axis of suspension of a pendnlmm is the point from which it is suspended，and conse－ quently around which it turns．
The uxis of oscillation of a compound pendu－ lum is an axis constituted by $\Omega$ series of poists so situated that their motion is neither re tsnded nor sccelerated by their constituting part of a bolid body，which，of course，can mony move together．（Alkinson：Ganot＇s Physics， 3rd ed．，1868，§ 70．）

Axis of a balance：The line sronnd which it turns．
Axis in peritrochio．［Gr．$\pi$ epi＇（peri）$=$ round about，and tooxas（trochos）$=8$ whecl．］Th 6sme as the wheel and axle．One of the six mechanical powers，consisting of a peritro chium，or wheel and an axle．
5．Magnetism：The line supposed to con－ nect the north and south poles of a magaet．

Visual axes: Tha axes of the several raya of light which enter the eye. [See Optic Axis ghove.]

Axis of refraction: A atraight line drawn perpendicular to the plane of a transparent body, and passing through the point of incidence of a luminous ray, striking it from without Axes of double refraction: All doubly roo fracting aubstances have one or more linea, or one or more planes, along which no doubly refracting force exists. If there is one such line or plame, then the body is said to have ons axis, or plane of axes, of double refractlon; if two, two axes, or planea of axes, of double refraction, and ao forth. A real axis, or plane of axes of double refraction, is one in which the doubly refracting force really does not exist ; whilst a resultant axis, or plane of axes, or an whis or plane of compensation, is one in whicls axis or plane of compensation, is one in whicls it exists, but ia neutralised by a counter force of equal intensity. A positive axis of clouble refraction is the term used when the refracted ray is bent towards the sxes, or plane of axes, of the body; and a negative oxis of double re. fraction is the expression employed when it is bent in the contrary direction.
7. Architecture:

Spirul axis: The axia of a apirally-twisted column.
Axis of an foric capital: A lina passing perpeadicularly through the middla of the eys of the volute.
8. Geology: An imaginary line on the oppoaite aides of which the strata dip in different directions. If the angla formed at their point of junction be a salient one. they form an anticlinal axis, or Antichinst (q.v.); but if anticlinal axis, or ANTiccinal (q.v.): but if it ia a re-entering one, then they constitute a synclinal axis, or Srachanal. (q.v.). (Lyell: Man. of Geol, 4 th ed., 1352, p. 57.) [I., 2.]
9. Botany: The axia is that part of a plant around which the organs are aymmetrically arranged. The ascending oxis means the stem. (Lindley: introd. to Bot., 3rd ed., 1839, p. 69.) The descending axis is the root. (Ibid.) Recessory caxes are axes in addition to the main cessory cexes are faxes in the atelns of Calycanthus, Chione, found in the aterns of Calycanthus, Chi-

B．

B．The second letter and the first consonant in the English alphabet，as it is also in the other fauguages of the Aryan family spoken in Europe．The characters in use in theae aeveral tongues haviag come through the Greak from aome old form of apeech，probably the Phoenician，belonging ta the Semitic（better called the Syro－Arslian）family，it was to be expected that the letter corresponding to $\mathbf{B}$ would occnpy the aame place in the Semitic as in the pretiously－mentioned $\Delta$ ryan alpha－ bets．Investigation shows this to be the case，to a considerable extent at least．A sound and character correaponding to the English $b$ and the Oreek $\beta=$（beta），is the second letter and the first conaonant In Phoe－ nician，Hebrew，Samaritan，Aramaic，Arsble， and Coptic．In Ethiopic，however，beth stands tenth instead of second in order． Turning next to aome of the Aryan languages of Asia，we find that in armenian be is the twenty－sixth of thirty－eight letters ；and in Sanacrit，Mahratta，\＆c．，bū or bu is generally placed twenty－third in the list of consonants， where it la preceded by phü and followed by $b h \vec{u}$ ．Returaing again to the Semitic， （beth），the name given to the aecond letter of the Hehrew elphabet，is really Aramæen． Like the corresponding word in Hebrew，$\Gamma$ ？ （baith），it aignifice a house，to which it has some faint resemblance．The Hebrew coin－ letter 9 ，the Samaritan 9 ，and the Phee－ nician $\$ 9$ ，have a somewhat greater one； and probably the old hieroglyph from which theae symbols were abbreviated may have been the most like of all［A，Alphaget．］
$B$ is a flat mute［MuTe］，the voice not being so entirely shut off in prononacing it as it is when one of the sharp mutea，$p$ or $f$ ，is uttered The $b$ sound is prodnced by compressing the lipa，a vowel being added to render it audible． It ia hence called a labial，from Lat．labium $=$ a lip，plur．labia $=$ lips；its other associates in the aame category being $p, f$ ，and $v$ ，with which it la often interchanged in the cognate languages．Thns to bake is in O．H．Ger prachan，and in Slav．peshtshi．The Eng．life is the Ger．leben；and while life is the sab－ stantive，live is the verb．So the Lat．balcena is from the Gr．фád入acva（phallaina），фádava （phalaina）with $p h$ pronounced as $f$ ，whilst from one or other comes the Eng．whale．The Eng．have is from the Lat．habeo．So also the Sanscrit vyagra $=$ a tiger，becomes the Mahratta vagh（pronounced wagh），and is transformed into the Hind bagh．Othe letters than the labials can be interchanged with $b$ ：thus the Greek $\mu \dot{0} \lambda u \beta \delta$ or（molubdos） and the Lat．plumbum＝lead，unlike as they appear，are akin，$m$ beligg exchanged for $p$ and the old form of the Let，bellum＝war，was duellum，whence our Eng．Words bellicose and duel．

2. To atruggle ineffectually against, as when abip is said to bafils ineffectually with the winds.
I (a) Wedgwood beliaves that thers are two distlnct verbs apelled bafte, which have besa confounded together. Uader the one he would place the signification given above as No. 1, vlz., to degrade, to inault. The second and third algnificationa of the transitive verb, and that rauked under the intrsusitive one, he would rslegate to his second yerh, of whlch the prinary form was intranaitive, aignifying to act in an ineffective mamosr, and trsnsitively to cauas one to act in such a way. This secoud verb he connecta with the Swiss baffeln $=$ to ehatter, to talk idly. (Wedgwood; Dict. Eng. Etym., 2nd ed., p. 39.)

I(b) Crabb thus distinguishes between the verbs to bafle, to defeat, to disconcert, and to confound: "When applied to the derangement of tha mind or rational faculties, bafle and defeat respect the powers of argumeat, disconcort and confound the thoughta and feeliaga. Bafle expressea less than defeat ; disconcert leas than confound. A person is baffed in argument who is for the time discomposed and ailanced by the superior addreas of hia oppoasat: he is defeated in argument if his opponent has altogether the advantage of him la strength of reasoning and jus tmess of aentiment. A person is disconcerted who loaes hia preasnce of mind for a moment, or has his feelinga any way discomposed ; he is confounded when tha powers of thought and consclousness become torpid or vanish." "When applied to tbe derangement of piana, bafle expresses lesa than defeat; defeat less than confound; and diseoncert less than all. Ohatinacy, perseverance, akill, or art boffles; force or violence defeats; awkward circumstarces disconcert; the visitation of God confounds. When wicked men atrive to obtain their ends, it is a happy thing wben their adversaries have sufficient skill sad address to baffe all their arts, and sufficient power to dejeat all their projecta ; but gometimes when our best endenvours fail in our own behalf, the devicea of men are confounded by the interposition of Heaven."
